ABSTRACT

In a speech recognition system of a mobile telephone the words are organized in a trellis structure. Thus, at each instant the speech recognition system only needs to search a limited part of the entire vocabulary. Such an arrangement solves the problem of having to search many words at a time, which is time consuming and imposes a high computational load on the system, and will therefore significantly increase the accuracy for the speech recognition system.

(Fig. 1)